OVINE PULMONARY ADENOCARCINOMA (OPA)

ADVICE FOR FARMERS

OPA is a lung cancer in sheep caused by a virus, Jaagsiekte sheep retrovirus. OPA tumours may develop in as little as 4-9 months and the disease is always fatal.

The virus is spread between sheep by the respiratory route and also via colostrum and milk.

Warning signs of OPA?

- Unexplained loss of condition
- Breathing difficulty
- Evidence of excessive fluid from the nose when the head is down (half cup full, usually clear, sometimes foamy, often has a consistency similar to washing-up liquid)
- Cases of pneumonia that don't respond to antibiotic treatment (or improve but then deteriorate several weeks later)
- Deaths, particularly at times of stress such as bad weather, lambing time etc.

Actions to take?

- Veterinary investigation to confirm the cause of illness or death.

Options if OPA is confirmed:

- Minimise close contact - e.g. housing, feeding troughs.
- Test-and-cull - currently ultrasound scanning is the best method to identify OPA as early as possible. Discuss this with your vet to weigh up advantages and limitations of the technique. Your vet may advise sheep with inconclusive scans to be isolated and re-scanned six weeks later.
- Cull sheep identified with signs of OPA at scanning immediately - OPA cases will always die and meanwhile they can transmit virus to other sheep in the flock.
- Cull lambs of OPA affected ewes - The lambs are very likely to have been infected with virus and may develop OPA.
- Isolate purchased rams and scan every three months.
- Replacement of whole flock - Re-establishing a flock risks introducing other diseases, or re-introducing OPA - take veterinary advice.

SHEEP SCAB

Have you got all the facts you need to protect your flock?

Sheep scab, caused by infestation of the skin with the scab mite costs the UK sheep industry >£80M per year.

Mites resistant to the ML injectables have been found in Scotland so correct diagnosis is crucial to give the correct treatment, at the right time and to all animals not just those showing signs

Sheep scab mite

What are signs of sheep scab?

- Scab is characterised by yellow scabs, restlessness, scratching, loss of wool and loss of condition

How is it spread?

- Scab is spread by direct contact with infested animals, but as the mite can live off-host for 16-19 days, scab can be spread via fence posts, handling equipment, trailers and shearing equipment

If you suspect your flock has scab, you must report it to APHA and should seek advice from your vet on controls.

Treatments

- A blood test is available for sheep scab and can diagnose the disease before clinical signs appear, reducing the spread
- OP dipping is an effective means of controlling scab and also kills mites resistant to the MLs but must only be used as a plunge dip

Never allow dip to enter a watercourse and ensure you have a permit from SEPA prior to disposal of waste dip to land.
